Battery systems for implementing secondary power sources have proven to be reliable and the need for battery systems increases daily due to problems and the aging process of other energy sources such as photovoltaic cells which have been developed in the past. Battery systems can be characterized as to their dependence on either one or the other of a pair of electrodes or cell elements which are generally constructed to be a negative and a positive electrode combination. Consequently, the battery system can be characterized as being positive or negative and the contents of the cell elements can be characterized as being negative or positive. These characteristics of a battery system are important in taking a battery system from one charge condition to another charge condition. Some battery systems are referred to as being rechargeable since they can be recharged by the discharge of energy from the battery system. For example, hydrogen gas is a well known positive electrode element of a battery system for storing energy. The hydrogen gas can be supplied from a hydrogen generator which can be supplied with energy from the discharge of the battery system. This invention is directed to a battery system having an energy collecting element which is configured as a positive electrode element of the battery system. However, certain prior art apparatus also possess an energy collecting element which is considered to be a negative electrode element of the battery system. The negative electrode element of a battery system is typically referred to as being polarized or as being electronically discharged by the positive electrode element. These prior art systems have applied improvements in the field and it is believed that improved systems are still needed. This invention is directed to a system which is believed to constitute an improvement over those prior art systems, some of which are described in the following U.S. Pat. Nos.: 5,387,567; 5,386,166; 5,475,005; 5,479,777; 5,362,858; 5,681,979; 5,498,191; 5,552,955; 5,580,523; 5,790,038; and 5,890,655. Therefore, it is a primary objective of the invention to provide an improved, more effective, rechargeable energy collector and battery system which has capabilities which are not achieved by any prior art structure. Another object of the invention is to provide an improved energy collector having a floating insert which is constructed and arranged to be electrically isolated from the other insert members to CHENNAI: Union Home Minister Amit Shah on Sunday launched a scathing attack on Congress president Rahul Gandhi, accusing him of leading the party along with "shameless leaders". Shah said, "A hectic fever of corruption has hit the Congress party". With the message sent in his toughest attack on any opposition leader so far, Shah went on to say that the party's defeat in the recent Lok Sabha polls was partly due to corruption. He even went as far as saying that if the opposition comes to power, "people will throw the country into anarchy". Read more: Rahul, Nitish Kumar, Kapil Sibal & Arvind Kejriwal Asserting that in politics, as in cricket, "it is not about power but whose power is more," Shah said a "corrupt Congress led by Rahul Gandhi is now ready to face all the problems of this country". Taking a dig at Rahul and his aide Sam Pitroda, the BJP president said the former may not have done much, but had "a huge heart". Shah claimed Pitroda, who had joined the Congress after parting ways with the Bharatiya Janata Party, was planning to use the party's government formation as "the pretext to blow his own trumpet". Speaking on the current political scenario, Shah said the Congress has played a masterstroke by keeping in the "background" all those who have "committed crimes" and has "positioned them to take revenge". Shah alleged that corruption is practised by the Congress as a "crafts", the party finances are "stolen", the Congress leaders are involved in "black money", whereas former finance minister P Chidambaram had to "turn a 'policeman' in the name of the Indian citizens".
